The Team Energy Audit

A quarterly team ritual mapping who is spending sustained time in their tertiary, and why. Structural drain becomes a team agenda item instead of a private endurance test.

THE DRAIN

Individual drain has individual fixes, but its causes are usually structural: roles shaped by history rather than wiring, work distributed by availability, a gap orientation silently taxed onto whoever complains least. Left unexamined, the structure keeps refilling whatever energy the individual tools free up.

WHAT THIS TOOL DOES

The audit is a facilitated ninety minutes each quarter. Every member maps their real time across the three orientations against their profile, sustained tertiary load gets flagged without judgment, causes get named as structure, and the findings feed directly into the Trade Board and, where needed, into role design itself.

The audit

|----------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 1 Map   | Each person: rough percentage of the quarter spent in WHY, WHAT, and HOW work.                                     |
| 2 Flag  | Tertiary share above roughly a quarter of the time, sustained across the period, gets marked.                      |
| 3 Trace | Every flag gets a structural cause: role shape, coverage gap, inherited task, habit.                               |
| 4 Route | Causes go to fixes: trades to the Board, placement to the Planner, role-shape findings to the manager, explicitly. |

HOW TO USE IT

- 1 Run it against the team map. Profiles on the table first. The audit reads load against wiring; it needs both.
- 2 Normalize the flag. Everyone carries some tertiary load; the audit hunts sustained and structural, not occasional and normal.
- 3 Name the gap tax out loud. When a team lacks an orientation, someone is paying to cover it. Quarter after quarter, it is usually the same someone.
- 4 Track the trend, not the snapshot. One quarter is weather. Three quarters of one person's rising tertiary share is a role redesign waiting to be scheduled.

WHAT IT WON'T DO

The audit surfaces structural drain; fixing it sometimes exceeds the team's authority, and honest facilitation says so rather than letting the ritual imply powers it lacks. Findings that need role redesign or headcount go upward, in writing, with the map attached, which is precisely how the case gets made.
