Meeting Keeper Cards

Three rotating meeting roles, purpose keeper, progress keeper, precision keeper, each with a card of licensed interventions. Every orientation's question gets asked, even when its wiring isn't in the room.

THE DRAIN

A meeting's blind spot is its composition: rooms without WHY energy drift from the goal without noticing, rooms without WHAT energy end ownerless, rooms without HOW energy ship unexamined decisions. The missing question is not asked, because asking it is nobody's job and everybody's drain.

WHAT THIS TOOL DOES

The cards make it a job. Three roles rotate each meeting, and each card licenses specific interventions, sentences the keeper is expected to say when the trigger appears. The license matters: an intervention that is a role reads as service, where the same sentence freelanced reads as obstruction.

The three roles

- | | |
|---------------------------|--|
| 1 Purpose keeper | Licensed to say: "We've drifted from the goal", "Which decision does this serve?", "Why are we doing this part?" |
| 2 Progress keeper | Licensed to say: "We're leaving without an owner", "Can we decide this today?", "What's the next physical step?" |
| 3 Precision keeper | Licensed to say: "We haven't tested the edge cases", "What breaks first?", "Who maintains this after?" |

HOW TO USE IT

- 1 Assign roles at the top of the meeting. Thirty seconds. Ideally against wiring, primaries keep what energizes them, but any assignment beats none.
- 2 Put the cards on the table. Physically. The visible card is what converts a challenge into a role being performed.
- 3 Thank interventions by name. "Good precision call" trains the room that the questions are the system working.
- 4 Rotate deliberately. Occasionally assign against wiring in low-stakes meetings; performing another orientation's question builds real empathy for it.

WHAT IT WON'T DO

Keeper cards guarantee the questions get asked, not that they get answered well, a precision question still deserves precision thinking, and a room with zero HOW wiring should route the flagged items to one after the meeting. The cards are coverage, not replacement.
